Schott NYC collaborates with Maje

By Emily Jensen - 13 October 2017

Paris-based brand Maje has teamed up with the New York label on a capsule collection primarily made up of outerwear for fall.

The Maje x Schott NYC collaboration includes just six pieces, which Maje describes as “chic and fun pieces that can easily be layered – a decidedly contemporary collaboration which is both cool and feminine.”

The small capsule collection includes a reversible cropped bomber jacket, a trench coat, a cropped ribbed sweater, a sheepskin jacket, and an embroidered t-shirt. Prices for the collection range from $155 for the Tennessee embroidered t-shirt, to $1,095 for the Boston sheepskin jacket. The Maje x Schott NYC capsule collection is available at Maie’s online store and on Net-a-Porter.
Maje is part of the SMCP group, which also oversees the labels Sandro and Claudie Pierlot. In September, the French fashion label acquired Isabelle Guichot, formerly the CEO of Balenciaga, as its general manager.

Schott NYC was founded in 1913 by brothers Irving and Jack Schott and is primarily known for its outerwear. The brand operates flagship stores in New York City, Chicago and Los Angeles and is also sold at boutiques across the United States. The brand has also considered expanding to the Canadian market.